

Architectural education

The Institute of Architecture at the University of Applied Arts Vienna is one of the best schools of architecture worldwide. The goal is to teach architecture as an encompassing thought process that puts the architect in the position to define architecture as a three-dimensional expression of culture. Throughout the semester, international well-known architects, artists and theorists are invited to take part in presentations to guarantee a global approach and give input to stimulate an architectural discourse.

Student information

Architecture at the University of Applied Arts is taught as an integrative discipline; an entity of artistic, technical, organisational, human and social aspects. A profound knowledge of creative, analytical design is the core within a networked study. The architectural study is offered only as a Master Program that takes 6 semesters and finishes with a MArch.

Architectural design is taught in 3 studios each with its own focus.

1. Kazuyo Sejima
2. Greg Lynn
3. Hani Rashid

Admission qualification

Each admission to the University depends on the artistic talent of the candidate which is established by a portfolio and a personal interview. The admission is decided by a jury. Requirement for approval is a Bachelor (BA) in Architecture.
